The main purpose of these activities is to get kids out of the speech room and using their skills in other environments. This kit includes 4 types of carry-over activity cards for each of the following sounds: /S, R, K, L, SH, CH, TH/ plus blends. Cards are black and white and can be printed on paper or cardstock. I like to have my students highlight their sound and role-play the activity before leaving the speech room.

Activity cards:

- Interview a friend cards - Students find a friend/faculty member in the hallway or another classroom. They ask the questions on the card and wait for a response. Students rate themselves using the picture cues on the card. This can be repeated several times using the same questions with different people.
- Make a phone call cards - Students can either make an actual phone call using the question on the card or just role play. I like to role play lots of possible scenarios, then let students look up the number in a phone book and make an actual call.
- Give information cards - Students find a faculty member or student and read them the information on the card. Then they rate themselves.
- Tell a joke cards - Students find a friend or faculty member to tell a joke. They then rate themselves using picture cues.
- Data tracking cards - The therapist or students can use to track their own data.
